Editor's Letter

I would like to start this edition by thanking subscribers for their kind messages, cards and donations, received over the festive period. All were a very pleasant and gratefully received surprise and show that Nationalists are the most decent of people! All donations will certainly help with rising costs as we attempt to keep our purchase prices low. Now the festive season is over, we all revert back to our regular routines and here at Britain, My Nation we continue our endeavours seeking some form of unity within the Nationalist community. Our nation is still very much under threat from those that seek to destroy us and that pressure is increasing month by month particularly now Starmer and chums are in power and doing their worst!

One very positive and encouraging event that has just taken place and which all readers will be very much aware of was the inauguration of President Donald Trump. The man is certainly not everyone's cup of tea but he will most definitely ruffle feathers and take some tough decisions that will give all Nationalists confidence in the fact that it is very much possible to reverse the trend of our nation's journey down the road of self-destruction. It will be interesting to see how the great partnership between Britain and America will fare with it being apparent there is no love lost between Trump and Starmer!

Many readers have been very complimentary regarding our 'Introducing...': articles, where a platform has been provided to leaders of political parties. Unfortunately, as mentioned in my last Editor's Letter, this series has now come to an end, although several more invitations asking for contributions were issued but without response. We are unsure why that might be, but feel it somewhat disappointing that any party would not snap up the offer for a free platform on which to sell their party and potentially grow its membership. But we move on.

In an earlier edition of our magazine mention was made of a blog that I used to publish that was removed back in August last year, as apparently I had violated the Google Hate policy. The item was posted under the heading of 'UK Civil Unrest'. I have reproduced that article on page 8, so you can judge for yourselves how hateful I have been! It is, however, typical of the censorship which exists in our country and with reference again to President Trump and having seen some of the many Executive Orders he has signed, we may just see the start of common sense returning to the world. We can but hope!

While I write this, news has reached me that political opinion polls now show ReformUK to be the most popular political party in Britain. In many ways this is good news as it means the support for traditional parties is dropping and will cause them to suffer at election time. However, the bad news is that the vast amount of ReformUK supporters have been hoodwinked into believing that the party will be tough in dealing with our immigration problem. However party leader Nigel Farage has made it clear that, although taking a tougher line, he considers immigration necessary and says nothing about those already here who have zero respect for our people, our nation or our customs and traditions. Even so, with a general election 4 years off and it possible that the party will continue to grow we reiterate that we can look forward to the many career politicians who ride roughshod over us with their policies, receiving a very bloody nose indeed at election time.

Britain, My Nation will only be available by post on subscription and not via the internet or by email. Articles, letters, newspaper cuttings, and general comments for consideration for inclusion in future editions are welcomed, but please include your name and address if sending items (these will not be published, unless advised otherwise). Please send

We are planning on publishing Britain, My Nation for some time to come, but we can only do so with support from Nationalists within our community. We are truly grateful for the support and encouragement we have received to date but there is always more we can do, so please make sure you mention Britain, My Nation to your friends, family and political comrades and perhaps request a couple of extra copies that you can distribute as samples. Thank you all once more.

In the News – 1

A New Dawn has arrived for the West! The INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT TRUMP has eventually taken place, an event that the liberal-left never thought would happen and very much one that they involved themselves in preventing. Those who had previously made the most outrageous comments in public and on social media regarding Trump are now grovelling on a truly embarrassing scale. Take (black) MP David Lammy (please!) who in 2017 had said on X that Trump was a “racist and KKK/neo-Nazi sympathiser”, and that he (Lammy) would protest against the then-governments “capitulation to this tyrant in a toupee”, but he has since said that this is “old news” and has heaped praise on Trump. As part of his settling in process TRUMP HAS SIGNED NUMEROUS EXECUTIVE ORDERS, 33 at the last count, all in the space of a week, many on his first day as president. These have been particularly inspiring for Nationalists and our press has reported on these as being a “blueprint for the west” in as much as, if they work, such policies could very well be adopted by us. The Orders include:-

Restoring Freedom of Speech and Ending Federal Censorship

Putting America First in International Environmental Agreements

Withdrawing the United States from the World Health Organisation

Securing Our Borders

Ending Radical and Wasteful Government DEI (Diversity, Equity and Inclusion) Programs and Preferencing

It remains to be seen how these progress, but with this type of agenda and the Nationalist slant to a very strong inauguration speech, we can only but hope this is the beginning of massive change in the world.

Despite Prime Minister Starmer, presumably, having authorised almost 100 Labour Party current and former party staff members to be sent to the US to campaign for the Democrats in swing states, and thereby assist in attempting to enable Kamala Harris to become president, he has still, as has Lammy, embarrassingly welcomed Trump. Labour politicians couldn't be more hypocritical if they tried!

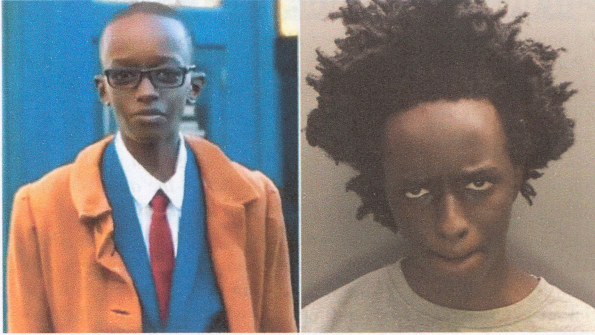

An unusual turn of events occurred in the last few days as it has been reported that TRUMP PRAISES STARMER FOR 'DOING A VERY GOOD JOB'! This seems totally at odds with the relationship it was assumed Trump and Starmer would have. However, looking further into Trump's statement, it is not all it seems on face value. Trump also said that “He's represented his country in terms of his philosophy. I may not agree with his philosophy but I have a very good relationship with him”. It must be assumed that Trump refers to Starmer's philosophy in terms of it being a socialist and left-wing one and that Starmer is doing a good job in his attempt to destroy the country with that, which of course, he is. So Trump doesn't literally think Starmer is doing a good job per se but doing a good job in doing what he is doing. It may well be a tongue-in-cheek reference, as ‘praising’ Starmer when he has such an appalling record and is so widely hated by the British public, would be ludicrous. Starmer has proved himself time and time again to be a liar and this will be his undoing.

The latest and most sickening of Starmer's lies relates to what he knew about the SOUTHPORT MURDERER – AXEL RUDAKUBANA. Now that the trial is over Starmer has said that he has known since day 1 that Rudakubana appeared to have terrorist intentions and an extensive past record of violence. Starmer still allowed hundreds of patriots to be arrested for rioting and to be fast-tracked to trial and imprisonment as a result of them being so enraged as a result of the murders.

In the News - 2

Evil killer, Rudakubana, was 17 years of age at the time of his crimes and so sentencing guidelines differ from those for 18 year olds and over. He was still given almost 52 years which means he will be eligible for parole at around the age of 70. If there was ever a case for the return of capital punishment, then this would be it. Details of his savage murders and attempted murders have been released and are truly sickening. There can be no sorrow in light of the news he has just been savagely beaten in prison, although this cannot be substantiated as it would be unlikely that a prisoner with such a high profile would be held in anything other than solitary confinement, certainly at this early stage of his imprisonment. Finally, the British media must be condemned over their reporting of these murders, as, when they occurred, the perpetrator was identified to be a Briton from Cardiff and the picture above left was used almost as if to paint the murderer as an innocent victim! His mugshot turns this on its head as the truth emerged that he is of Rwandan parentage. A further scandal is that his father, Alphonse Rudakubana, was allegedly a Rwandan warlord who was responsible for mass killings in Rwanda and that he was brought to this country by Tony Blair with nine other killers, under a special provision and that his human rights lawyer was none other than Keir Starmer who fought to stop him being extradited by the Rwanda government for genocide! So it all seems to make sense now.

COUNCIL ELECTIONS MAY BE POSTPONED as a result of a major overhaul of local government. 16 of the 21 county councils scheduled for elections for May have requested postponements citing financial and logistical challenges of holding elections amidst such fundamental changes. Labour's newly announced plans for sweeping reforms, as outlined in the English Devolution White Paper published on 16th December 2024, aim to dissolve the traditional two-tier council system and replace it with unitary authorities and strengthen regional mayors. Labour's reforms are on the basis that they believe local government will be simplified, and costs will be cut resulting in better efficiency. However, many believe such changes will undermine local services and there is little evidence that there will be cost savings. It is also felt that such changes are a cover enabling power to be consolidated in the hands of regional mayors and central government, with the real motive of silencing grassroots democracy. Such a postponement is unnecessary and likely to be politically motivated to avoid major losses at the ballot box for Labour, who, with their appalling record and ratings, most definitely need to face the electorate in May with the government receiving the message that they are extremely unpopular.

Finally, for several reasons, ELON MUSK SEEMS TO BE HITTING THE HEADLINES mainly due to his teaming up with Donald Trump and making high profile appearances with the president. This has upset all of the Trump-haters to the extent that they are desperate for a negative spin. The best of these being, that in his exuberance at Trump's victory and waving by way of acknowledgement to crowds, photographs were taken of Musk seemingly making a Roman salute. Social media has since been awash with other politicians caught in mid-wave appearing to do the same! To compound this supposed conversion to Nazism, Musk then went on to urge "German far-right supporters to move beyond 'past guilt' in a surprise AfD (Alternative for Germany) campaign appearance" via video-link, saying "I think you're really the best hope for Germany. Fight for a great future for Germany". What next? A guest appearance at a British Nationalist event? Now that really would be news!

How We Won Millwall by Steve Smith – Part 2 of 5

This is the second instalment of an article by Steve Smith, the 1993 Tower Hamlets British National Party Organiser, first published in the, now defunct, Patriot magazine, which ran to 8 issues between Spring 1997 and Summer 2001. Patriot, edited by Tony Lecomber, was very professionally produced and although sadly short-lived, served partly as a vehicle to promote the successful takeover of the BNP by Nick Griffin in replacing John Tyndall. Steve Smith (now of the British Democrats) has kindly given permission for us to reproduce this article which documents one of the finest hours in the history of the British National Party. As an aside it needs to be remembered that these events took place at a time before the internet was available and so the achievements detailed are all the more impressive when considering the extent of physical effort required by activists.

The leaflet that was used (a type that would be used in several future campaigns) was a departure from standard BNP literature. Instead of focussing on national issues and complex aspects of party policy, we simply appealed to ordinary whites in Tower Hamlets by discussing the current local issues that concerned and worried them. In this instance, we pointed out the wave of racial attacks that were being inflicted on whites and urged them to come to our activity to express their feelings.

The campaign leaflet itself was produced and presented in a rather mundane and ordinary way – basic typed text and felt-tip headings, all in black and white. This gave it a ‘home made’ feel as opposed to a flash, multi-coloured effort which might have detracted from the essence of the campaign.

Quite frankly though, I didn’t have much faith in the march taking place as we intended to march from Bethnal Green to Bow – an area the police would have considered ‘racially sensitive’ and I was fairly sure it would be banned. However, the demonstration was allowed to take place and one of the reasons for this I am sure, is that ‘the powers that be’ realised a ban on the march would have inflamed an already tense situation.

On the 11th March 1990, between 350 and 400 BNP members, supporters and members of the public gathered near to Bethnal Green tube station and marched off.

What was particularly pleasing was that a large percentage of the procession were ordinary members of the public without any previous connection to the party. The ‘home made’ leaflet had done its job well! After the march, which roughly lasted 45 minutes, a short rally was held in a small park near Mile End. The whole day had been a great success – our first step to building towards ‘community-based’ politics in the East End.

The two-week campaign culminating in the rally had been very intense and hard-worked. Even so, there was no time to rest as we were putting up four candidates in different wards for the May council elections in the Bethnal Green and Stepney areas. Our actual methods were a blend of light canvassing and leafletting with a public meeting 2 weeks before polling day. The meeting was held in Weavers Fields School in Bethnal Green. We had asked for Osmani School which unlike Weavers Fields was actually in one of the contested wards.

BNP Rights for Whites march, March 1990, protesting against racial attacks.

How Do We Save Our Decaying Country (Part 7)?

In this series we have so far looked at measures that could be introduced to ensure our young people have a firm foundation for their journey into the adult world. We continue by discussing the obstacles that exist and which will potentially cause them problems in that journey and the steps that need to be taken to remove those obstacles. In edition 2 of Britain, My Nation we touched on the fact that we see immigration as the root of all evils, that is, the cause of the majority of problems we face in this country.

Readers will most likely agree with this statement. Just over 75 years ago, Britain had an Empire and was a major producer and exporter of many goods and was, to the greater part, self-sufficient. Immigration over those years has increased year on year, to the extent that 2024 saw one of the biggest and most blatant influx of aliens we have ever seen. Our leaders have told us that we need the skills and expertise these people bring us, that diversity is wonderful and that without these immigrants our country would come to a standstill. This is blatant nonsense, they were never needed before and frankly should never be needed in the future, particularly if our leaders were prepared to take the necessary measures to invest and train and then subsequently appropriately reward our own people – much has been said on this in earlier articles in this series.

Our country is struggling to cope under the strain of millions of people that we do not need and should not be here – excessive demands on housing, our NHS, schools and our benefits system are all causing the system to creak under this pressure, to the detriment of our own people, the people who have fought wars and paid taxes to maintain these institutions and we are simply giving it all away to the people who do not contribute to society in any way and serve only to undermine us as a nation.

We hear friends and family and even strangers in public places, on the bus, in the pub, in the shops all complaining about what is happening, talking of a broken country beyond repair, but actually doing nothing about it, having been cowed almost into submission by our leaders. How often, have you heard someone say "...we're not allowed to say that..." or that "...they are not racist, but ..."? We have almost been beaten into submission to only talking in hushed tones about these issues and now the government is actively seeking to remove even that option! Consequently the Nationalist community, more than ever before, has to face up to the challenge we are faced with by talking frankly to our friends and families and telling them that they do not have to accept the situation, it is not normal and together we can stand up and fight against this tyranny.

Nationalism has always taken a strong line on immigration and our rulers have attempted to paint us in the worst possible way as a result, but in recent months it seems the tide is turning and the phrase REMIGRATION is on the table, with not only Nationalists talking about it, but 'celebrities' who have in the past kept quiet openly discussing the subject. More and more of our people can see the damage that is being done to our society as a result of these foreign invaders and we need the remigration to become part of the day-to-day discourse of the general public to ensure our leaders no longer sweep the problems under the carpet.

The government needs to close our borders and ensure that all financial incentives that encourage these people to come here are removed. Those currently residing in relatively palatial surroundings, when compared with how they lived in their native countries, should be placed in remigration centres, camps, in effect, similar to those our military occupied during their national service days, and they need to be processed quickly and returned to where they have come from.

They need to remove our country from any international agreements that force us into actions which are not in the best interests of our country and ignore any country that attempts to exert pressure on us as a result. We have stood alone in the past and we can do so again.

Finally, we need to look at those fellow countrymen who purport to be doing the honourable thing by welcoming foreigners into our land or agree to funding nations who are quite capable of getting by without our charity. These people who think of themselves as the great and the good, but who are never directly affected by the outcome of their actions, need to be taken to task and removed from all positions of influence or forced into appropriate retribution.

Next time we look at one of the major institutions of our nation, one which everyone benefits from at some time during their lives, the NHS. It is a major undertaking to put right what is wrong with the NHS but we take a look at some issues that need to be addressed for it to revert to its rightful place as the envy of the world.

The Cancelled Blog Article – UK Civil Unrest

Who can honestly say that they are surprised with recent events? For far too long now the white British people have suffered the fallout resulting from uncontrolled immigration, as well as the slings and arrows, usually from the liberal elite who are comfortably well off such that the day-to-day slog of life doesn't affect them.

We live in a two-tier society where those who do not really belong here are handed everything on a plate and fawned over by that same liberal elite. Life is tough and for some it is bloody tough and it seems that despite doing the decent thing and working hard for a living, our people are increasingly being slapped in the face. Our people struggle to pay rents or raise funds for a mortgage deposit but come across the sea in a dinghy and you're given a place to live and be fed, watered and the rest.

Of course, it is argued that these immigrants or 'refugees' have suffered or are in danger in their homelands and so they make the perilous journeys to come to Britain where they will be safe. Bullshit! Where have they come from? France? Is it not safe there? And how many safe countries did they cross before they arrived in France? Those that do arrive seemingly carry magic mobile phones that must pay and recharge themselves from fresh air and their haircuts look new or does each dinghy have a resident barber on board? And additionally how is it that 99% of these dinghy-dwellers seem to be young and fit males in the prime of their lives? I would like to know where their loved ones are, you know, wives, girlfriends, sisters, children, have they left them all to suffer that from which they are escaping. If that is the case then they are all cowards. I would like to think that our people would stay and protect our loved ones. Obviously I am missing something.

Yet this flood of people continues despite our NHS struggling, our social services struggling, our housing stock proving inadequate (allegedly) and the indigenous population of this nation are the ones that lose out, although of course, special arrangements are made for the immigrants. And we see it every day, our people see it every day. Yet, our government, of whichever persuasion does not see it, everything appears acceptable to them and is something that we must do. But it is not and it must stop and our people have had enough. I have been predicting for some time now that although our people are extremely tolerant, probably more so than any other, there must be a breaking point and it seems this has been reached. That is despite British Nationalists forecasting there will be trouble, even as long ago as 1968 when Enoch Powell made the Rivers of Blood speech we have been forecasting it and nobody listened. We were just intolerant, racist, fascist, even Nazi's for even daring to question what has been happening. But surprise, surprise for our people the fuse has blown and the protests began, as a result of a 17-year old 'Cardiff man' born to Rwandan parents, so most definitely immigrant stock, murdering 3 white children and seriously injuring several more. The protests have inevitably been met with heavy-handed policing resulting in rioting. You may have noticed the difference between our people protesting and when immigrant groups protest – yes, that's it, when white people protest the police do not run away, nor 'take the knee' nor suggest the protests are understandable, no, we don't get the same treatment.

Of course, we do not condone violence and lawlessness, but at least we can understand why it is happening and that's more than the government do. Prime Minister Starmer suggests that we are all 'far-right thugs' and 'will not be tolerated'. Apparently the government and media have suggested the English Defence League is responsible for organising recent events but as far as I am aware and as even Hope Not Hate have stated, the EDL have been pretty much non-existent since 2013. It would not surprise me if the government themselves had a hand in the rioting in order to be able to start banning our organisations. We shall see.

The 'ordinary people' have also shown their true colours on Facebook and other social media by saying that the rioters should all be locked up and Tommy Robinson, Katie Hopkins and so on should also be locked up for instigating the riots. Many of those 'ordinary people' have comfortable lives that are unaffected by any of what is happening, nor understand the root causes and are showing how stupid they really are by believing the line spun by the government and the mainstream media. Oh, and some are calling for the army to be brought in and the introduction of lockdowns – you couldn't make it up. These people deserve all that is coming their way.

Finally, latest news is that the government has announced 'emergency security' for mosques on top of previously announcing extra funding of approximately £50million for protecting Muslim communities. Starmer has now addressed the nation in 2 televised appearances as a result of all that is happening. The man hasn't got a clue and is making the situation worse. He deserves everything coming his way!

Which Nationalist Party? (1 of 4)

In previous editions of Britain, My Nation we have attempted to provide relevant information on the Nationalist organisations that we are aware of, in order the reader can compare and contrast those that are available.

Generally these differences are not great, however, when comparing ethno-Nationalists with civic Nationalists there is a huge gulf, one we believe to be the difference between saving our nation and for it to continue on its current trajectory to fulfilling the Great Replacement of our white indigenous population with a multitude of foreigners. Some of the parties we list are serious about what they want to achieve and others not so much. Some have good intentions but have an inadequate infrastructure and so will never be able to influence the political agenda. I alluded to this in the last of these articles and for that reason we intend, over the next few editions of this magazine, to begin whittling down the number of parties we include, with reasons why, so that we are left with only the serious players with a nation-wide network on the Nationalist scene. Consequently, this will be the last time that we include the British National Party and Patria. Reasons for that decision will be provided below, along with any news from the other parties (where applicable, as the festive period seems to have been a dormant period for most), together with details from party policies relating to defence.

British Democratic Party

The British Democrats continue to campaign with a small but dedicated number of members and it is difficult to assess their profile nationally, so 2025 will be a year to monitor party progress closely. It may well be that the party carries on with the good work it does but, in terms of growth, remains static. Perhaps the party leadership need to think seriously as to how it will grow nationally and also how it will appeal to younger Nationalists, many of which are coming out of the woodwork, as unless they do, their older member demographic will prove that time is not on their side. It may be that a merger with another party would be the solution.

Party policy, under the heading of Foreign Policy and Defence includes the key policy that the party are not indifferent to the need to maintain world peace and would use the UK's permanent position on the UN Security Council to that end, but the party would not send servicemen to die in other nations' conflicts. It says foreign policy must be dictated by the need to protect our people, territory, and vital interests and we would defend ourselves against any aggressor with vigour and determination and so must have the men ready to meet any threat to our nation at a moment's notice. Additionally the BDP would deploy troops to deal with civil emergencies, including intentional disorder and will also be needed to help to guard our borders against mass immigration. Troops must be in a permanent state of readiness and protected by life-defending equipment of the highest quality. Finally the party is determined that Britain must retain an independent nuclear deterrent.

Britain First

The party continue a relatively high level of activity mainly protesting at migrant hotels but not exclusively so. A season of a 'March for Remigration' will start with that organised for Saturday the 1st of March in Nuneaton in the Midlands. This will be an interesting marker for how much support the party has, particularly as leader Paul Golding recently claimed a membership total of 20,000 (see BMN Edition 6). On social media the party continues a daily religious posting on the lines of "Good morning patriots. Jesus is Lord. Britain is Christian", which is all well and good but I am not sure that many Nationalists will warm to that form of messaging.

On defence, party policy includes ring fencing spending on the Armed Forces and massively increasing the defence budget to fund modern, sophisticated services capable of defending not only the British Isles, but the former Dominions and wider Commonwealth as well as investing heavily in new technologies and weapon systems to give the UK the edge in defence industries. The party would bring back National Service and make it compulsory for one year for all citizens upon the completion of education. It would also bring back the historic county regiment system to encourage pride and devotion to local units of the British Army. It would halt the sale of any military hardware or technologies to countries outside of the Commonwealth, or the Western World, and ensure that our service personnel have the best equipment, accommodation and training available. The party will pass laws prohibiting any historical prosecutions of Armed Forces veterans, including those who served in Northern Ireland during the Troubles. These laws will guarantee immunity from prosecution in all cases, whether government instigated or privately litigated. These laws will also include retroactive punishments for legal practices that have targeted British service personnel. The party would create and introduce PTSD centres on every military base to help service personnel deal with the traumas they experience while serving the nation and also secure and retain the programme of free grants for service personnel upon leaving the Armed Forces, so that they can find gainful employment or education.

British Freedom Party

Although the party seems stagnant regarding physical activity their web-site is regularly updated with commentary on current affairs and including reference to former BNP Chairman Nick Griffin, who it is understood to be working for the party in the background. It is unclear if the party is registered with the Electoral Commission as no details can be found. If it is de-registered then the party will be seen as a political movement much on the lines of Patriotic Alternative, but very much smaller and therefore largely ineffective.

The only reference found on their website relating to defence is the statement that - our borders are our own and we assert the right to defend them by any means necessary.

British Movement

The BM Annual General Meeting took place in the East Midlands on November 9th. Representatives and delegates from across the country were in attendance. Speeches to the meeting and reports were given by the National Chairman, the National Secretary and the organiser for the host region. Personal reports and organiser reports were presented and a short auction of collectibles was held. The Sunwheel Honour shield for activism and recruitment was awarded to BM North-West region and activist awards were announced.

With regards defence policy, BM states that defence against common enemies would be undertaken if needed.

British National Party

Sadly the BNP is no longer the party that many of us have belonged to over the past thirty years. There was a time when, with MEPs and councillors, the party looked as if it might achieve great things. However, ego's and mal-practice got in the way to reduce it to a mere shadow of its former self, run by one man and his dog who carry out no activism, but merely update their website from time to time and accrue money from sources unknown, as membership must be negligible. 2023 party accounts on the Electoral Commission website show a healthy financial balance which if used in the pursuit of a true political purpose would enable the party to make some impact, but, as all true Nationalists know, the BNP is now nothing short of a political scam and unworthy of including in a list of Nationalist political parties and so, after this entry, it will no longer appear in this feature.

English Democrats

Little news to report other than a new leaflet campaign is underway.

On defence, the English Democrats supports continued membership of NATO as a strictly defensive alliance which does not interfere in the internal affairs of its member states. It considers that our armed forces should enjoy the highest standards of training and equipment with their primary role being that of a fighting force. The party will also insist on ensuring that the resources devoted to the military should match the commitments they are expected to fulfil, with the main purpose of our armed forces being to protect our country and the interests of its people. The English Democrats oppose the use of our forces in operations where they are in effect serving as mercenaries of a foreign state. They state that members of the armed services who suffer injury in the service of their country should be quickly and properly cared for and compensated and the abolition of the military hospitals was irresponsible and will be reversed. They would also create an independent veteran's association to provide better care for, and help with re-settlement of, ex-service personnel into civilian society. Finally they would retain a nuclear deterrent but explore other means for providing an effective strategic defence.

Heritage Party

An extensive statement on the party website relating to defence includes that the first duty of the armed forces is the defence of the realm. The party believes that the managed decline of the British armed forces must stop and be restored to at least year 2000 levels with an Army of 110,000, a Royal Air Force of 55,000 and a Royal Navy of 45,000 so we once again become a strong military power that can act positively where necessary and when it is in our national interests. This includes deployment around our sea borders to prevent illegal immigration and to ensure that our airspace, 200-mile Exclusive Economic Zone and underwater infrastructure is secure. The Heritage Party will ensure our military personnel are supplied with all the equipment they need to do the jobs they are asked to do and there must be no control of our armed forces by anyone, apart from the UK government so the UK does not become entangled in far-away foreign conflicts which have nothing to do with our national interests.

Which Nationalist Party? (3 of 4)

Homeland Party

The party maintains a high profile on social media with nigh on 30,000 followers on X (was Twitter) and achieving 750+ members in just over 12 months. Remigration is high on their agenda and is entering the mainstream media discussion, with a Remigration Conference being hosted by HP taking place in the spring.

The party are still in the process of developing policies, but are keen to ensure they are thoroughly worked through prior to publication.

National Front

As per our last edition, with minimal information on the party website, no comprehensive policy on defence was found. (It may be that a future edition of Britain, My Nation will include an article devoted to details from a past NF policy document).

National Housing Party UK

The party are sending out regular email news updates but little seems to be happening for the party generally.

A specific policy on defence cannot be determined, although their website policy section refers to the NHPUK campaign to introduce a form of National Service for 18 year old males. This would last for one year and be used to teach soldiers how to work as a team, with discipline and physical fitness playing a big part. It mentions that our military needs to be strengthened as a whole with the soldiers having the opportunity to stay on and enlist for the military full-time if desired. Various vocational courses would also be included to help when their service is completed. NHPUK would also campaign to leave NATO and would "Nationalise the British Army".

National Rebirth Party

The party continues to publish the monthly magazine, 'Rise Britannia' which contains various articles and branch reports. Although few in number the party places great emphasis on a high level of activity, holding meetings and street activities. Their progress will be viewed with interest.

Demand 7 of their 20 point manifesto is that all British men must perform some kind of military service for a period of at least 18 months. They say that it must be put upon our people that all British men should partake in the collective defence of their people's will to live, through performing some kind of military service on the basis that the military environment is one in which the collective is above the individual, the mission and goal is front and centre, and in which hard work, discipline and mutual respect enable the individual to achieve things they never thought capable of. For British men to enter such an environment would imbue them with exactly those qualities, by default, for life. Once people have experienced what it is like to live without selfish individualism, they seldom return to it, and thus the collective militarisation of the British National Community will be instrumental in insulating our people from the return of liberalism and its corruptible ideals.

New British Union

With leader Gary Raikes still recovering from illness, NBU appear to be inactive currently.

On defence, the NBU simply say that it would remain neutral towards all non-aggressor nations and seek to establish stronger diplomatic relations in the interest of trade and world peace.

Patria

Unfortunately Patria will be the second party to disappear from our listings after this edition. The party, albeit run by dedicated Nationalists, is too small to have any impact nationally, confining any activity to a small part of West Sussex. With membership income of just £290 as detailed in the 2023 party accounts on the Electoral Commission website, and with a membership fee of £10 it means the party has just 29 members, a number that is never going to have any influence on Nationalism.

Patriotic Alternative

On the 21st January BBC Wales broadcast a documentary entitled "Unmasked: Extreme Far Right" in an attempt to smear the organisation, after a journalist, who had been undercover with PA for a year, witnessed a few incidents that were made in private and were felt to be unacceptable. PA leader Mark Collett had fortunately recorded his interview in full and released his recording prior to the BBC broadcast. Collett was very professional in his responses to the questioning he was subjected to, albeit by a very weak interviewer, and after listening to his recording and then watching the BBC broadcast it is very easy to see just how biased the BBC editing processes are. (contd. over)

Patriotic Alternative (contd.)

As a result of the programme there have been calls, from Dame Sara Khan, former Counter-Extremism Commissioner, amongst others, for the organisation to be proscribed, because, in her opinion, they are “creating a climate conducive to terrorism”, despite Collett’s excellent rebuttal of their allegations. However, much damage will have been done should anyone, with little or no knowledge of PA, have viewed the documentary as it is inevitable that those making idiotic comments will frighten people away. On the positive side the documentary had a limited television networking via BBC Wales.

On defence policy, item 20, of the PA plan entitled Our Armed Forces states that they will ensure British armed forces are generously funded to defend UK borders and our overseas territories and would not be involved in foreign conflicts where Britain has no direct interest. PA will maintain the production of arms in the UK to ensure we are both self-sufficient and protect the many thousands of related British jobs and will also ensure that British service personnel are given the very best equipment to ensure they can do their job effectively. They will also ensure that when British service personnel retire from active duty they will transition fully and safely back into civilian life with organisations being funded to help former service personnel achieve this, including any necessary physical rehabilitation and counselling. PA will also enact a policy of National Service for all young people for 12 months in either the Army, Navy, Royal Air Force or in care homes assisting pensioners or those with disabilities, with those refusing National Service being barred from working for the state and losing the right to stand for election.

Populist Party

Populists support neutrality, like Switzerland, and would leave NATO. They believe a policy of non-alignment the best way to avoid unnecessary wars and would therefore avoid such conflicts.

Reclaim Party

Party leader and actor, Laurence Fox, raises his head above the parapet from time to time but party activity seems sporadic. Fox was in Washington at the time of Trump’s inauguration.

Reclaim defence policy under the heading Reclaim Defence states that defence of the realm is a vital function of government. They believe that the Ministry of Defence should procure more advanced equipment from the Americans, and the UK’s defence budget should be matched to the level of risk. They also state that the UK will not indulge in speculative overseas missions.

Reform UK

Reform UK are riding high in popularity with membership numbers nudging the 200,000 mark and the party topping various opinion polls. Branches are sprouting up across the country, with members being sought as candidates and for staff positions. With good results achieved in a few council by-elections, the May elections should prove very interesting. Party leader Farage was also in Washington at the time of Trump’s inauguration.

On defence, Reform UK will ensure service personnel have the resources they need to defend the nation and that they are respected and supported after they leave the services. They would seek to increase defence spending to 2.5% of National GDP within 3 years (and 3% in 6 years). They would increase basic pay across our armed forces to boost recruitment and retention. A new Armed Forces Justice Bill would be introduced to protect our service personnel on active duty from civil law and human rights lawyers. It would seek to increase numbers in the forces by recruiting 30,000 soldiers. They would regenerate Britain’s defence manufacturing and technology, introducing incentives and tax breaks to boost the UK defence industry and ensure front line soldiers have the equipment they need. Finally, education for military personnel both during and after service would be provided to ensure a successful return to civilian life.

UKIP

UKIP are still struggling to be relevant after a huge drop in popularity, though its X account boasts a following of over 200,000. Fortunes may change with the forthcoming leadership election. Nominations are due by the 26th January with a new leader to be announced on the 6th March. With a non-refundable candidacy fee of £3000 it is unlikely the party will be overwhelmed with candidates! Interim leader Nick Tenconi is currently pushing a hard remigration line but despite this being a very popular Nationalist policy it seems unlikely that it will save UKIP. Once a new leader is appointed UKIP’s web-site may get the revamp it desperately requires but until then no policy details are actually available on it.

The Best of Spearhead Magazine – August 1976 (1)

We continue our regular feature recognising, in our view, the best Nationalist magazine that the movement has ever seen. The mastermind behind it was John Tyndall, although for this issue and until 1980, the editor was Richard Verrall, with Martin Webster as contributing editor and John Tyndall being acknowledged as publisher.

As we read again these vintage issues, this one being number 96 from August 1976 and nigh on 50 years old, we cannot fail to get a picture of how organised and how popular the National Front was back then, together with the strength of the writing in the articles in what was a monthly magazine. We also get a feeling of how prophetic many of the articles were and how much of what is written stands up today.

Unfortunately we can only reproduce a few of the 20 pages from each issue, but have attempted to select those with particular resonance. Sadly 50 years on and the plight of the British people has become so much worse than in 1976 and we can but wonder how things would have been had the National Front maintained its strong presence and been at least as prominent today as it was then.

Reading these old magazines and other Nationalist literature must surely give us some hope that all is not yet lost. The British people are fighters at heart but it takes a while to stir us out of our slumber. I truly have no doubt that the day will come when we do take back our country from the cancer that is spreading throughout and we will once more be able to stand proud for our race and nation.

ROBERT GREGORY

IN DEFENCE OF NATIONALISM

"NATIONALISM is one of the main causes of war. Nationalism is out of date. We should all be internationalists now – citizens of the world." Such statements as these have become common today – the recognised slogans of internationalist hypocrisy and cant. These statements, made on the public platform or in newspaper articles, are generally the pronouncements of individuals who belong to nations which have had the right to nationhood for so many centuries that it appears to them no longer threatened; or of people who give allegiance to no nation, either because such does not exist or is of recent creation, but who rather aim to destroy such 'anachronisms' in the name of the 'progressive' notion of internationalism.

The former group are invariably the tools of the latter, who use their gullibility, naivete, self-guilt and opportunism in order to further the ultimate aims of the internationalist – the elimination of the nation-state and its replacement by a World Government controlled by a small elite. In order to weaken the nation-state the above slogans are used to implant the idea in the minds of the innocent that the Nation and the emotion engendered by it, nationalism, are not only anachronistic but positively evil and responsible for the greatest atrocities in history.

The idea that Nationalism is one of the main causes of war is false. War is not caused by nationalism but by the lust for domination, in which the possessions of others, material, cultural and spiritual, are seen as instruments for increasing one's own power. Power based on the domination of others is the principal cause of war; such power has always been the antithesis of nationalism because it crushes individual nations into dust in its relentless drive for total domination. The conquests of the Arabs in the seventh century, the Mongols in the thirteenth century, the Ottoman Turks in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries and the Communists in the twentieth century have all been motivated by the unquenchable desire for domination. Genuine nationalism does not lead to what may be described as a warped type of imperialism but is rather an answer, perhaps the only answer to such an evil creed. If it were not for the existence of nationalism large states would long since have seized all the smaller nations of the world, destroying both their culture and national identity. Had it not been for the nationalist spirit there would have been today no Great Britain, no France, no Spain, no Rhodesia and so on; the world would have been poorer without their distinctive cultures and political systems.

Militant nationalism is the answer to the lust for domination, the warped imperialism pursued today by the Internationalist-Communist alliance. Nationalism is the force that acts as a moral challenge to all the evils inherent in such an alliance, the lust for power, the greed for material enrichment even at the cost of bringing impoverishment and starvation to the rightful inhabitants of a nation, and the tyranny of physical might which would enslave smaller nations to its will, denying them every kind of liberty and taking from them their distinctive identity. Nationalism is a people's defence against enslavement and theft – theft of its material, cultural and spiritual possessions. Nationalism stands for liberty and respect for other people's right to their own culture and identity. Genuine nationalism recognises the value of nationhood; whereby the differences among peoples are acknowledged and groups are allowed to develop at their own pace and of their own accord; in which other cultures are studied but where the differences between them are accepted and emphasised, not ignored or disguised; in which the nation, in common with other nations, preserves its character and its special qualities by developing within itself – not by polluting itself in a racial mixture whose end result would be to destroy its identity.

NATIONALISM PREFERS PEACE

Because, as a rule, a nation can best preserve and develop its national culture and political system when peace reigns, it is in the interest of nationalism to avoid war, not to provoke it. Yet this does not mean that nationalism should be other than vigilant in the nation's defence. Nationalism by its nature prefers peace. It engages in war to defend the liberty of its people and the integrity of the nation. It is those that violate the principle of nationalism who provoke war – at the present time the Internationalist-Communist Alliance.

Internationalists pride themselves on having made a great "moral advance" in repudiating allegiance to their own nation (if such exists), and are therefore scornful of nationalism and those who persist in calling themselves nationalists. It has been conveniently ignored by them that one might as well argue the necessity of discarding ones family before one can become a 'loyal' citizen of a larger unit e.g. the nation. Yet few responsible people would state that because family devotion can, under certain conditions, exclude wider loyalties, families should be abolished – although a few cranks and degenerates corrupted by liberal-masochism at its most vile have indeed hailed such an event as another "moral advance". Just as the family is the unit of the nation, so is the nation the unit of the world; as a nation would be the poorer without its families, so would the world be poorer without its separate nations, with all their wealth and variety of individual character, history and tradition – a tapestry of achievement with which to instil pride and hope for the future.

Nationality is to the nation what personality is to the individual. Just as the individual personality cannot develop along its own lines but is fettered and cramped in mind and soul when enslaved by the domination of another person, so the individual nation cannot healthily develop along its own national lines, or indeed long survive when it is enslaved by those motivated purely by the lust for power and domination, which is all that lies behind the pious pleas for internationalism.

Liberty is essential to both individuals and nations. Liberty to work, live and associate with those of similar background and culture and not to be forced either into association with those of totally alien origins and culture or be driven deeper into the nations heartland to escape the invasion of such alien groups in the nation's cities. Liberty, to express opinions concerning the well-being and future of the nation and to attack those who threaten that future, particularly those associated with that sinister alliance whose aim is to eliminate the nation-state and destroy the identity of the race. Liberty, to preserve what is finest in the nation's tradition while accepting the need for change – not for its own sake, or for the sake of some 'liberal' or 'progressive' idea, but rather because change is deemed necessary for the well-being of the nation.

In essence, the ideal should be a worldwide group of sovereign nations, all developing in their own way and with their own qualities – qualities which should be recognised and cultivated rather than reduced to a degenerate polyglot mass in the name of 'freedom' and 'equality' while in fact being manipulated by evil and destructive forces motivated solely by a lust for power. That is why a militant nationalism is necessary for Britain, for it is only through such uncompromising vigilance that we can defend the principle of nationhood – the basis of liberty.

N.F. VOTE IN THURROCK SHOCKS OLD PARTIES

There are four noticeable factors. These are immense apathy among Government supporters, remarkably strong Tory turn-out, crumbling of the Liberal vote, and more support for the National Front than ever before.

— Evening Standard

For the major parties the significant figure was that of the National Front in fourth place after an unashamedly racist anti-immigrant campaign.

Labour is becoming desperately worried that an erosion of its own working class vote to the Front could

— Daily Mail

After a series of NF election successes this year, the establishment parties received their biggest shock to date in the Thurrock parliamentary by-election, when NF candidate John Roberts polled 3,255 votes (6.6 per cent of the poll). Once again this impressive first-time vote proved that the National Front is well on the way to pushing aside the Liberals as the third party.

This great success for the NF produced a shock reaction from the media and the old parties. The Evening Standard saw "more support for the National Front than ever before", while the Daily Mail described the Labour party as "desperately worried".

It is clear that the corrupt established parties are terrified of the enormous potential which the NF is now showing at the polls. The Daily Mirror mounted a campaign of unprecedented viciousness against the NF in the week prior to polling day so as to rescue the Labour party. Two hate editorials and a double page smear attack were thought necessary to stop our young party.

John Roberts and wife Rita march with Robert Relf.

ROBERT RELF JOINS CAMPAIGN

Our candidate John Roberts, Chairman of Barking Branch, was supported in the NF campaign by Robert Relf, the courageous fighter against the Race Board. Robert Relf, who with his wife Sadie joined the National Front after his release from prison, attended the campaign march and rallies and also spoke to Tilbury dockers in support of the NF.

The Thurrock success proves the rapidly growing support for the National Front. It comes after a series of encouraging electoral results, notably the massive NF votes in the May elections and the Rotherham by-election in June, when NF candidate George Wright polled 1,696 votes, only 500 votes short of the Liberal candidate. In council elections in Wandsworth and Enfield recently, NF candidates beat Liberals with votes of over 12 per cent.

Mr Kingsley Read

We have received communication from Mr. Kingsley Read protesting that he did not apologise to the Race Relations Board, as stated in our last issue.

Be this as it may, Mr. Read did give an undertaking to the Board not to repeat in future his action in advising local residents in Blackburn not to sell their houses to coloured immigrants. This was a retreat from all previous promises that Mr. Read had made to the effect that he would go to prison rather than comply with the Race Board's demands.

In our Spearhead comment we contrasted Mr. Read's undoubted 'climb-down' with the uncompromising stand made by Mr. Relf against the Race Board. Even accepting Mr. Read's protestation that there was no actual 'apology', we see no reason to alter our view that his behaviour in comparison with that of Mr. Relf was abject.

Freedom of Information Act 2000

The Freedom of Information Act 2000 (the FOIA) was intended to create transparency in the public sector and has proved most useful to Nationalists over the years to substantiate claims made by our policy-makers and also for propaganda purposes. This was taken advantage of by the Britain, My Nation editor along with Tom Linden, back in British National Party days when they worked together, defining the questions to be asked, of whom, the subsequent managing of the responses and how then to utilise the information to our benefit.

In our last article details were provided of an approach to the Metropolitan Police, in 2006, and their response and at the same time various FOI requests were made to the Home Office. The first of these that we look at in this edition of Britain, My Nation is the request for details of the numbers of non-British and non-white inmates in prison custody. The Home Office promptly responded to this request, within a fortnight in fact, however in their reply they advised that "This information is exempt from disclosure under section 21 of the FOI Act as the information is already publicly accessible. I have been informed by the National Offender Management Service (NOMS) that this information is freely available in the NOMS Caseload Statistics Quarterly Brief, October to December 2005, table 2.11, which can be viewed on the following website: <http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/omcs.html>". Unfortunately, no papers exist to confirm if this link was followed up on but having tried to search for similar statistics recently, the same data can be found by carrying out an internet search for "Statistics on Ethnicity and the Criminal Justice System, 2022". It would be worthwhile spending some time reading the results from this search, but bear in mind the proportion of ethnic minorities that there are in our population!

At the same time the Home Office was asked the following:

the number of Muslims resident in each county as in the last census; with the response that

"The information is not held by the Home Office. I am informed that it will be available from The Office for National Statistics."

An internet search will again provide the data and can be found by searching for "Research Report on Population Estimates by Ethnic Group and Religion" and further interesting data can be found searching for "Islam in the UK – Statistics and Facts – Statista";

the number of asylum seekers per county and total cost of these per county; with the response

"The Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) have confirmed they do not hold this information in the manner that you have requested it and neither does the FOI Act require public authorities to create information for applicants. We are therefore not able to provide you with this information as we do not hold it. However, IND have informed me that some information of relevance to your request may be found in the IND's quarterly publication located at www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html in tables 9 and 10".

However, on entering this in a search engine now results in bringing up guidance and assistance to those seeking to improve their immigration status. A much more interesting read can be found by searching for "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 2024"; and finally - the costs to each county for providing translation services for those whose first language is not English; the response to which was that "The IND have informed me that this information is not held centrally by them and is most likely attainable via local authorities' budgets".

This, as the reader can imagine would have been an onerous task but would produce some useful information. However, this has been a subject of interest recently, when news headlines revealed that the cost of translators for non-English speaking benefits claimants topped £27m over the last 5 years. That is before the costs in other departments is calculated, the prime example being the NHS of course!

It can be seen that much useful information could and still can be found, if the correct wording is used in FOI requests or in internet searches. The general public is blissfully unaware of what information can be found, but, if they were aware, it would certainly harden their attitudes to what ills the authorities are inflicting upon us.

In our next edition we look at further and more recent FOI requests, which should prove of interest to the reader.

A Time In History

This regular feature will list some events in British history which took place on dates during the months covered by this publication.

February

3rd 1953 – Gale-force winds accompanying high tides cause a major flood disaster on the east coast from Lincolnshire to Kent, with 283 drowned and thousands homeless.

7th 1991 – The IRA launch a mortar-bomb attack on 10 Downing Street when the War Cabinet is in session and windows are shattered but no-one is injured.

14th 1779 – Captain Cook is stabbed to death by natives at Kealakekua Bay in the Hawaiian Islands.

Putting America First in 14th 1945 – The bombing of Dresden takes place, it being one of the most destructive and controversial bombing raids of the war in which 100,000 civilians die in the firestorms which engulf the city.

16th 1659 – The first cheque known to have been drawn on a British bank is written today.

16th 1965 – British Rail publishes its plan, based on the Beeching Report, to halve the rail network.

19th 1410 – Richard II disappears while imprisoned in Pontefract Castle; it is presumed that he is murdered. His corpse is shortly afterwards displayed in London to prove that he is dead.

25th 1547 – Coronation of the nine-year-old Edward VI takes place at Westminster Abbey.

March

4th 1824 – The Royal Naval Lifeboat Institution is founded by Sir William Hillary.

4th 1912 – 96 are arrested after a suffragette raid on the House of Commons.

6th 1987 – The cross-channel ferry, Herald of Free Enterprise, capsizes outside Zeebrugge harbour, the crew having left the bow-doors open, with 200 people drowning as a result.

12th 1710 – Thomas Arne, composer of 'Rule Britannia', is born in London.

26th 1885 – The first cremation in Britain in modern times takes place at Woking Crematorium.

28th 1542 – All Englishmen between the ages of 17 and 60 are required to possess bows and arrows.

28th 1964 – Radio Caroline begins transmission from the North Sea.

29th 1940 – Metal strips are put into banknotes for the first time as a defence against forgery.

Dear Sirs

I have been a bit late to the party in respect to obtaining Britain, My Nation but I write to say I enjoy reading it very much. I commend the positivity that you try to convey but still have concerns that the British public in general have given up. I speak with friends and family who all bemoan the state of our country and who believe it is too late to make a change. I regularly put them straight as a result of personal experiences I have in working with a political party where the membership is younger and more positive about our prospects and this example encourages us older Nationalists and should help with the apathy of others. One request, if I may, can you please include some recommended reading reviews in future editions and perhaps I can make some suggestions to my friends and family? Thank you.

Yours faithfully, P Austin, Worcester.

Editor's Reply – Re. recommended reading – watch this space!

Dear Britain, My Nation

In the past Nationalists have talked about repatriation of illegal immigrants to no avail, however it seems this subject has raised its head again but with a modern slant and the revised term 'remigration'. In the past the subject was very much the domain of Nationalists but over recent months the subject has received a great deal of mainstream coverage. It may well be that with the massive impact of social media it is easier to spread the word but nevertheless more people are talking about it, particularly on X (was Twitter). I predict that 2025 will be the year when remigration is the subject that everyone is discussing over dinner, at work and down the pub. This can only be a good thing even though our government is unlikely to take much notice.

Best regards, Danny Mackenzie, Chester.

Editor's Reply – We think you are spot on Danny – look out for the recently announced Big Remigration Conference taking place in April and organised by The Homeland Party, and the European Remigration Summit to be held in Europe in May 2025 - @resum25 involving Martin Sellner. We hope to report on both events in due course.

Dear Editor

Your mention in your letter in Edition 6 of BMN certainly struck a chord with me as I have a large collection of Nationalist literature and general memorabilia that I previously had no plans for if I were no longer here. Consequently I have taken steps to rectify that, some of my collection will be sold on EBay and the funds raised pumped back into Nationalism in one way or another and my will has been revised to ensure that what is left will not be lost forever. I hope the message has well and truly been received by other readers. There is much of value to our cause that must be saved!

Yours sincerely, Dave, London.
